(See enlargement - Plate 1, page 7.) (30,000-35,000)
Euainetus was commissioned by the Syracusan tyrant Dionysius I to create a new ten drachma medaillon, probably to commemorate the expulsion of the Carthaginians from Sicily in 397-396 BC. Similar in design to the Kimonian types, Euainetus left us with his own distinctive artistic coin. The head of Arethusa is especially distinctive, with clean crisp design and graceful natural flowing beauty. Dekadrachms in the style of Euainetus were produced in much larger numbers than those of Kimon. History indicates that Dionysius was a man given to grandeur - identifying himself with Zeus and inviting a form of worship; he was also a writer of poetry and drama. During his long reign the decadrachms became an inflated currency used for the pay of his top henchmen and gifts for his honored guests.

It was raised as a plague for men. Sicyon was a small district in the northeast of the Peloponnesus that was for a long time the chief seat of Graecian art. It gave its name to one of the great schools of painting and is also said to have been the earliest school of statuary in Greece. Sutherland surmizes that there is a good case for assigning this issue to a mint in the north Peloponnese, in 21 BC, when Augustus passed through Greece on his way to Samos and the East. This temple reverse had previously been assigned to Athens suggesting that the temple was that of Zeus Olympios at Athens.
